Marlin, Tex., March 30.—Marlin will be out of the big league within two days, for the Giants are scheduled to leave these Siberian steppes on Thursday. Some of the men are taking their last look at the town, perhaps, but their parting glance will be neither long nor lingering.

"Go West, young man," said Greeley, but he had never seen Marlin; nor was William Wordsworth well acquainted with these parts when he penned, "And altepping westward seemed to be a kind of heavenly destiny."

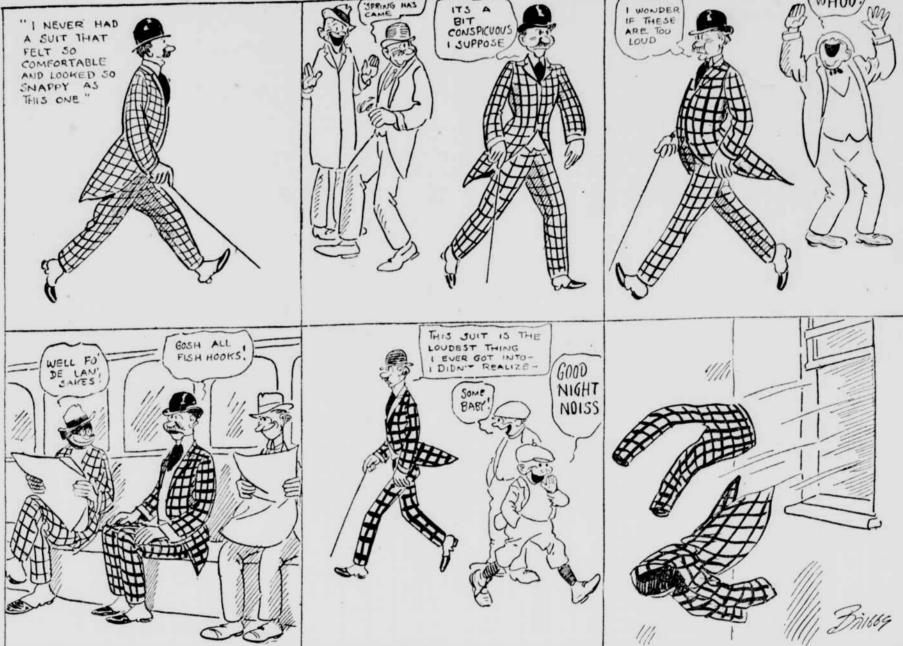

Among the necessary business to be empleted before leaving town was the est inoculation of the anti-typhoid erum. The boys have come to take eir germs as a matter of course.

A fugitive who escaped from worse han death reached Marlin last night. Taking advantage of the carelessness of his captors, William Slocum, of the Evening Sun," made a dash from the concentration camp of the Yankees in Savannah, where he had been interned for several weeks, and never stopped running until he reached Marlin. With kind treatment and good food, it is believed that Slocum can be brought back to normal condition again, but as yet no one dares to question him as to his ordeal. The very last and never stopped running of the Yankee camp makes
